BRITISH - FRENCH DEBT CONFERENCE MAY FAIL

U. S. CO-OPERATION IS ONLY POSSIBLE HOPE
FOR AN AGREEMENT

Press Pessimistic As Conversations Go Into Third Day

London, Aug. 26.—Very slight hopes of an agreement were held out today when M. Joseph Caillaux, French finance minister, and Winston Churchill, British chancellor of the exchequer, opened the third day of negotiations for the settlement of the French debt to Great Britain.

The British press was frankly pessimistic and held out American co-operation as the only possible chance of an early agreement between France and Great Britain. British newspapers, despite adverse comment from Washington, clung to the hope that the United States could be induced to act as a co-ordinator in the settlement of France's debt to both the United States and Great Britain.

Although hopes that a tripartite debt conference between the United States, France and Great Britain have been dampened there is still a hope on the part of the British press that the United States may agree to consider the settlement of the French debt to the United States in the light of making possible a simultaneous settlement between France and Great Britain.

Caillaux has been advised, according to one report that the United States will insist on an interest rate of three and a half per cent on the French debt to the United States. In view of this report, it is said, Caillaux has informed Churchill that he cannot offer Britain more than ten million pounds sterling a year, unless the United States is prepared to offer more lenient terms. Churchill, it is understood has reduced the demands for payment from twenty million pounds sterling annually to fourteen million pounds, and the press holds that this gap is too great to be bridged unless the United States steps in and makes some concessions.

The British cabinet is meeting this afternoon to hear report from Churchill upon the negotiations with M. Caillaux, but as Premier Baldwin is absent from London it is not expected that the cabinet will authorize Churchill to make any further concessions to France.

M. Caillaux meets Churchill at five this afternoon and it is the general impression that this will be the final meeting before Caillaux returns to Paris to report to his government, probably leaving the whole matter of France's debt to Britain open until some definite move has been made in the settlement of the French debt to the United States.

The foreign office made a brief announcement this afternoon that Ambassador Houghton and Foreign Minister Chamberlain had been in discussion for twenty five minutes this morning, but returned to disclose the nature of the conversations.

WHOLESALE LIQUOR DEALER IS TARGET

Columbus, O., Aug. 26.—"The wholesale bootlegger, the criminal type, who handles booze by the truckload, is the real menace to life and health," declared Federal Prohibition Director E. L. Porterfield here today. "He is dealing in rank poison. Genuine liquor is rarely bought, except on prescription. Labels and cases are counterfeited so perfectly that they cannot be told from the genuine."

Porterfield asserted that he is "not worrying about the small fry violators—that is the fellow who is making a little booze for private use. He said such a person doesn't cause much trouble unless a batch of the stuff gets too ambitious and knocks the roof off his house. We can go after this class later, but, just now, we are loaded for beer," said Porterfield.

HEALTH SURVEY IS PLANNED IN OHIO

Columbus, O., Aug. 26.—State health authorities today are arranging for a statewide survey to determine the extent of silicosis, a disease of the lungs, said to be caused by inhaling sandstone dust. The purpose of the proposed survey, it was stated, is to have this disease classified, under the Ohio workmen's compensation act, as an occupational disease and, therefore, provide compensation for workers afflicted with it.

Those subject to this disease, it was stated, include pottery workers, laborers in sandstone quarries and persons using hard wheels for grinding, polishing and buffing. Silicosis, it was explained, hardens the lungs, bringing about, in many cases, heart failure, pneumonia or tuberculosis.

BELIEVE CARMEL THOMPSON WILL BE GUBERNATORIAL CANDIDATE AGAIN

Letter From 1922 Standard Bearer To Meeting Of General Assembly Indicates Cleveland Man Will Again Make Race For Governor

Cleveland, Aug. 26.—As members of the Ohio general assembly gathered here for the annual reunion of the state legislators, a letter from Colonel Carmel Thompson, Republican gubernatorial nominee in 1922, acknowledging the recent endorsement of the Henry County Republican committee was made public, in which the Cleveland leader declared that he was giving the resolution his most careful consideration. This was interpreted by friends and foes alike to mean that in all probability Colonel Thompson would be a candidate next year for the prize he lost in 1922.

Emphasizing the millions of dollars being spent annually upon roads and other public purposes, and the need that the laws which the people have enacted should be strictly enforced, Colonel Thomson told the Henry county committee that these and other public important functions of the state executive should challenge the attention of every voter to the choice of the proper man for the place.

Thompson expressed the hope that "Republican sentiment will crystallize about someone who will inspire the care of the united Republican party."

"Whether," he continued in his letter, made public today, "that individual is to be myself or some other Republican makes little difference so long as the party as a whole has confidence in its candidate and is united and organized for the contest in November."

Other booms were much in evidence.

Friends of Joe Sieber, of Akron who made the race in the primaries two years ago, as a Klan candidate and ran second to Harry L. Davis, who was defeated by Governor Donahay in November, declared he would again seek the nomination. Former Governor Davis was again in a receptive mood it was reported and was anxious to wipe out the defeat suffered at the hands of Governor Donahay last fall.

The legislature being overwhelmingly Republican in its makeup, little talk of Democratic candidates was heard. It was generally conceded however, that the chief executive would receive the nomination for a third term with little opposition from the party.

Judge Florence Allen—the only woman ever elected to the supreme court bench in the United States, was reported to willing to enter the lists agains Frank B. Willis of Delaware. Her availability was a matter of general discussion.

These reports said, making panoramic plans of the Riff territory. These have now been completed and have been turned over to the flying corps who are already using them in the campaign to destroy the rebel munitions dumps and powder magazines.

This will be an important detail in the Franco-Spanish plans for the long expected joint offensive against the Riffs.

Once the offensive has been fully launched, officials said, they expected to destroy the morale of large contingents of Abd-El-Krim's forces, especially the Kabyle tribes, whose allegiance is said to be wavering.

A dispatch from Madrid today said King Alfonso had left Santander for Madrid to preside over a "war council" meeting of the directory which will ratify General Primo De Rivera's plans for the Spanish part in the joint Franco-Spanish offensive.

IMPENDING COAL STRIKE FACES LABOR SECRETARY

Davis Returns After Studying British Industrial Conditions to Find United States Threatened By Strike

WASHINGTON, AUG. 26.—The outstanding problem confronting Secretary of Labor James J. Davis, arriving in New York today from a two months trip through the British Isles, will be the impending anthracite coal strike.

Davis went abroad at the direction of President Coolidge to study industrial conditions in British iron and steel mills, textile factories and

FLAPPER BANDIT IN KNICKERS HOLDS UP DAYTON CONDUCTOR

Armed Miss Means Business When She Robs Car Employe.

Dayton, O., Aug. 26.—Though a steady search was made today by city and county authorities for a flapper bandit who held up E. F. Darling, conductor on a Fifth-street car of the City Railway system, at the West End loop, no trace of the girl was found.

Dressed in khaki knickers and a blouse, the little flapper with a "baby face" made her appearance suddenly on the car. No sooner had the conductor opened the door than she jumped in and covered him with a gun. Taken completely by surprise and at first believing the girl was playing a joke, Darling laughingly asked, "What do you want, kid?"

"I mean it," she chimed. "Hand over your cash."

This time there was not a twinkle in her eye, and she aimed the revolver like a true bandit.

Darling thought that discretion was the better part of valor and handed his changer to her. It was filled with change and she ordered him to empty it. Then she commanded him to empty his pockets, which he did reluctantly. Satisfied she had a complete "haul," the frail bandit leaped from the car and disappeared.

Before departing she ordered him not to start his car or give an alarm until some time after she left.

The girl was described today by Darling, who hesitated about making complaint, of being held up by a mere girl, but finally decided to do so, as being 22 years old, decidedly of the blonde type and weighing not over 115 pounds. The khaki knickerbockers and a blouse completed her attire. Darling said she "looked pretty nifty" and he thought she was trying to flirt with him, but she "soon became darned hard-boiled."

The last report of a girl bandit operating here was made by a bailiff in Judge Alfred McCray's Court, who was held up at Fifth Street and Robert boulevard several months ago. He was relieved of a gold watch and several dollars by a girl who answered, in a general way, the description of the latest hold-up artist.

HANDY DIVORCE IS RULED AGAINST BY COURTS IN BRITAIN

London, August 26.—Should a wife be allowed to divorce her husband for the mere fact that the husband wishes to marry another woman?

Should the courts be used to enable a man to break one matrimonial obligation in order that he can enter into another?

These two questions have been answered by the British Divorce Court with a strong negative.

This was the story: Mrs. Alice Lucy Buszard, of London, petitioned the court for the dissolution of her marriage with Roland Buszard, alleging misconduct. She complained about his conduct with another woman in October, 1923.

HUSBAND'S LETTER FATAL

And the husband wrote her, at that time, this letter:

"I am going to ask you to keep your word. I am going to appeal to your womanhood and sense of fairness."

"A few years ago, in one of your letters to me, you said, if possible, you would divorce me, for my sake."

"At the time it was impossible, but now the law is altered, and to prove misconduct only will give you your freedom."

"This looks very much like collusion," said Judge Rigby Swift, after hearing this letter read. "I am here," he continued, "to give relief to innocent persons who have been wronged by marital offence, but not to make it easier for those who have broken matrimonial bond to enter into another."

Noel Middleton, the wife's lawyer, argued that the whole question was whether there was an agreement between the husband and wife. If the wife had changed her mind because of the entreaties of the husband, he continued, that was not evidence of collusion to obtain a divorce.

"I really did not want to divorce him. I only changed my mind so that he could marry the other girl," said Mrs. Buszard on the stand.

DISMISSES PETITION

"Are you particularly anxious," asked the Judge, "that your husband should marry someone else, or did he persuade you to do it?"

"Well, he keeps on worrying me to divorce him," returned Mrs. Buszard.

Whereupon the judge dismissed the petition for divorce both on the grounds of collusion and public policy and laid it down clearly that in England an erring spouse cannot persuade his partner to agree to a divorce merely because he is anxious to marry another woman.

MACK SAUER IRREPRESSIBLE! HE WANTS TO GO BACK TO PERIOD OF COFFEE GRINDER

(By MACK SAUER)

"Backward, turn backward, O time
In your flight
Make me a child again just for to night!"

My plea for the return of the old fashioned times has probably led some readers to believe that I wear button shoes, suspenders, red flannel sleeve holders and tie a clasp. Yes and that I carry my loose change tied in the corner of a red bandana handkerchief.

Well, here I go again. Just now I'm thinking of the old coffee grinder remember it? Twenty years ago every home had one. Today coffee comes in tin cans and is made in an aluminum percolator. It may be better coffee than we had in the good old days. But when the American home lost the mother's starting the day off by singing over a coffee grinder it lost a blessing indeed!

The wealthy young man of today who clips coupons from liberty bonds has a father who probably clipped signatures from Arbuckle's coffee packages. Eighteen of them and you got a barlow knife. Fifteen and you got a checker board. Kids today wear $6.00 gold knives tied to solid gold chains. Have you seen any boys playing mumble-the-pegs lately? Do boys play checkers today?

Twenty years ago an orange was luxury that came once a year with Santa Claus. (I used to save the peelings, let them dry, and then chew on them at recess the week after Christmas). Today children eat oranges every morning for breakfast.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Huston and son, Fred, accompanied by Mrs. Huston's aunt Mrs. Jennie Nickles of Columbus, Ohio, will leave by motor Thursday for Jackson, Mich. to visit Mrs. Huston's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. John Cline. While gone they will take a motor trip to Detroit, and points in Canada.

MODISH MITZI—Close-Ups Of The Newer Fashions

OH! The joy of a peaceful, restful night. What a wonderful "up and going" feeling follows such a night of undisturbed slumber.

Oh! What tortures—what agony—what despair—goes with the nights where eczema and other skin diseases hold power and drive away rest and peaceful slumber. For under the cover of darkness like crafty beings work their most serious havoc.

S.S.S. is the established conqueror of these annoying skin diseases. S.S.S. drives these ever disturbing elements from your system—elements that carry in their wake—lack of energy—undermining health! You may try in vain to get rid of them by using salves, lotions, washes, all to no purpose. You can't do it that way—the seat of the trouble lies deeper—impure blood trying to throw off poisons through the tender skin.

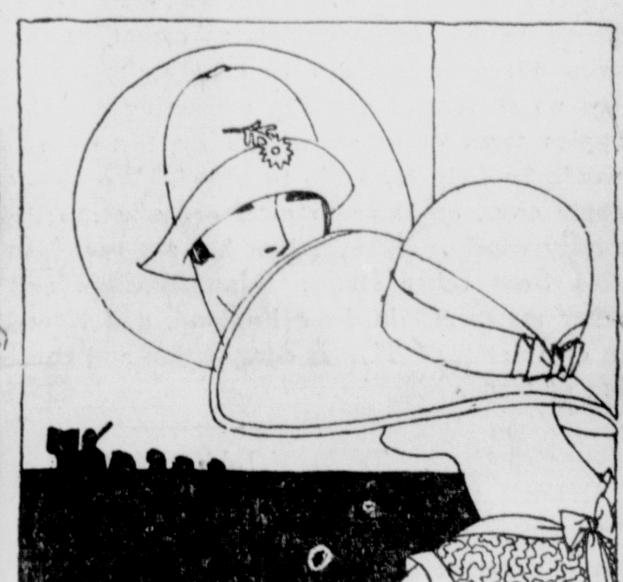

S.S.S. purifies the blood. It aids

Nature in creating new red-blood-cells by the million! Blood-cells that send new rich blood coursing through your system. Mitzi dropped in at the movies, not that she was curious to follow the plot, but this particularly famous film star is noted for her fashionable attire. As Mitzi remembers the movie, there was a close up of a very smart pocketbook with a zipper closing.

Again the pocketbook—no, a different pocketbook. A pocketbook that would match the buckles of the preceding picture since it is trimmed with lizard skin. Such a delightful movie. So educational! So utterly correct! Now Mitzi will go home and tell her own version of this screen story—so different that the scenario writer will never recognize it.

HOME PRODUCTS AND COMPETITION.

THERE is a discussion under way in New England over the willingness of the public there to purchase articles from other states when needs could be supplied with New England products. In a recent speech Senator Moses of New Hampshire said the public there was altogether too willing to purchase gingham made in Virginia, shoes made in St. Louis, apples grown in Oregon and potatoes grown in Idaho.

It is proper and commendable for the public to give liberal support to home institutions, use home products and be friendly to institutions and industries that contribute to the prosperity of the home town. But no institution of importance is satisfied to flourish in a small field, be content after supplying the local needs. Man or corporation, it is human nature to want to keep on growing, distribute over a wider field, serve the world if possible. That brings competition, forces the production of the best article, calls for the finest kind of marketing ability and business genius, prevents the public from being exploited and helps insure a dependable supply of high class goods in whatever line may be under consideration.

If St. Louis shoe manufacturers can turn out a product, ship it hundreds of miles and sell it in competition with the shoe manufacturers of Brockton and Lynn in their home towns, then credit must be given the business genius of St. Louis. Possibly it would be more helpful if the shoe manufacturers in New England gave closer attention to production and marketing and less to complaining. Growling never is helpful in selling. New England makes good shoes, good ginghams, grows good apples and potatoes, wants to sell them everywhere and does. Ohio, for instance, grows as fine eating apples as man ever tasted, but Ohio does not grow enough to supply the market continually, has no system of grading, marketing and distribution, and apples from other states sell by the train load here. It would be folly for Ohio to growl. We should develop our apple crop, organize to meet organization and market our apples wisely. Because that has not been done we buy apples from other states. Manufacturers and growers in other states sell in New England, and New England sells in other states. That is competition and competition is the life of trade.

TARIFF LAW FAILS.

UNDER the last tariff act Congress provided special attaches of the customs department to serve abroad, study manufacturing in various lines in many countries and determine production costs of articles sent to this country for sale. The tariff act gave to these attaches diplomatic privileges, the plan being to have them actually study the cost records in factories and mills, check up front corporation records the production costs. It provided that embargoes might be placed on articles where manufacturers abroad refused access to the records. The diplomatic privileges accorded these accountants were offered as the assurance that information secured would be withheld from trade rivals in this country.

Naturally foreign manufacturers have not been quick to recognize the diplomatic cost investigators and reveal manufacturing secrets. Belgium, friendly as she has been to this country, was the first to refuse, Spain followed and Great Britain has made an equally positive refusal. They refuse to recognize the diplomatic status of these agents even when the request was made by the president of the United States. In Switzerland and the Scandinavian countries, when some embargoes were put in force, strong objection was made to the state department at Washington.

The American government is without power to force these agents into the manufacturing plants and secure the information sought. Present indications are that the law may be quite a failure in actual test through inability to enforce it. Only friction could result from a general embargo against imports affected and that plan hardly will be tried, the few embargoes placed being more of a gesture than an application of a national policy. If the situation were reversed probably American manufacturers and exporters would be extremely slow in opening their records to representatives of other countries. Doubtless some other method of protecting American buyers against inflated prices and extortions profits will have to be sought.

"The trouble with shopping," says Nellie to me. "Lies not in the things which I'd like that I see."

But the ribbons and things such as monkeys on strings, And little pink bonnets and dollies and shoes Which I don't need at all, but I can't not refuse.

SEEK HERO MEDAL

St. Clairsville, Ohio, Aug. 26—Friends of Charles Crumhacker, 16, are making an effort to obtain a Carnegie hero medal for the youth because of his bravery displayed in rescuing Miss Sara Morgan, a local girl, from almost certain death by drowning in the lake at the Belmont Hills Country Club, near here. The girl fell from a log on which she was propelling herself about the lake and had gone down twice in 15 feet of water when Crumhacker reached her.

"It's this way," she said, "as I go through the shops And gaze on doll carriages, tea things and tops, I can see in each toy Some small girl or a boy Who would smile with delight such a joy to possess, And I buy it, of course, for I couldn't do less."

"There is nothing I see which is merely a thing; There is always a face and the smile it would bring An overcoat warm

I believe that all housekeepers occasionally feel that they would like to vary the favorite cake frostings, now and then, so that their families will not tire of them. The following kinds may not be particularly new, but they at least may be a little different from those which you have fallen into the habit of using:

Fudge Frostings: There are many varieties of fudge frostings, the plain vanilla kind being made as follows:

Put two tablespoons of butter into a saucepan and when it is melted add one and one half cups of granulated sugar and one half cup of sweet, cold milk.

Heat to the boiling point, stirring often to see that the sugar does not adhere to bottom of the pan, but when it reaches the boil allow it to continue simmering without stirring until a little of it, when dropped into a cup of cold water, will form a soft ball (if you use an icing thermometer this soft ball stage will be reached when the instrument reaches 233 degrees Fahrenheit). Now draw the pan from the fire, cool the syrup flavor it with one half teaspoon of vanilla extract, and beat to the right consistency to spread. If the frosting should become too hard before you spread it on the cake, it should be stirred over hot water 'till soft again, then poured over the cake at once.

Buttermilk Fudge Frosting: Use one cup of granulated sugar and one half cup of made sugar in the above recipe for Vanilla Fudge Frosting instead of the one and one half cup of granulated sugar called for.

Maple Fudge Frosting: Use one cup of granulated sugar and one half cup of made sugar in the above

Brown Sugar Fudge Frosting: Follow the above given directions for making Vanilla Fudge Frosting, but use brown sugar instead of white.

Condensed Milk Fudge Frosting: Follow above given directions for

stitute one fourth cup of water and one fourth cup of condensed milk for the half cup of sweet fresh milk.

Chocolate Fudge Frosting: To the recipe for Vanilla Fudge Frosting add from one and one half squares to

SALAD DRESSING AU ROQUEFORT PARIS, AUG. 19—An old French adage says that four persons are needed to mix a good salad dressing—a prodigy to pour in the oil, a miser for the vinegar, a savant for the salt and a fool to mix them all together. For dressing au Roquefort, mash Roquefort cheese. Add a small spoonful of vinegar, with three or four spoonfuls of oil. Season well and mix thoroughly.

DICK WHITTINGTON AND HIS CAT—(For Kids Only)

Once upon a time there lived a little rascal in an attic on crusts. His name was Dick and he had lots of rats and freckles. Day after day he carried papers and a hungry stomach around the town.

One day he found a flea-bitten kitten on the street, so he took it home and set it to work cleaning up the mice and rats. A few weeks later, he was unable to pay his rent. His landlady took the kitten in payment and started out across the ocean with it. She wanted to catch cat fish on the way across the awful big pond.

Within a few days, ten little kittens arrived on the ship. The sailors were all happy and so was the old mother cat. But it wasn't many nights until the ten little kittens were up in the rigging singing mournful tunes.

The captain ordered the kittens killed. A sailor threw them overboard, but they did not sink. They were too light-hearted for that. Their tails stuck out of the water into air and there the world had its first cat tails.

When the woman returned she did not know what to say to Dick, for she had lost the old mother cat in Paris and she had promised to bring it back with her. She feared the rats and mice would eat her renter up some night.

One day a bright thought struck her. She would have her picture taken and give one to Dick. She did it. The rats and mice left and all were happy.

MICHAEL'S MARRIAGE

By MICHAEL

CHAPTER 132

Fifteen minutes more, and Lilah was startled by the rattle of the door knob. The portal opened slowly to her moist eyes, and Michael entered, bearing an array of packages.

"Hello, dear!" he said, tossing the packages on a table and advancing toward her.

She ran into his arms. "Oh, dearest! I was so afraid something had happened to you!"

He kissed her. "I'm so sorry I was delayed, dear. Every place I went there was talk and more talk—." He halted and stared at her. "Why—."

Lilah stood, her body rigid, regarding him stonily.

"Michael, you've been drinking!" She said it tragically.

He flushed.

"Yes, ah—at the last place I went to, the man I went to see insisted that I have a drink with him. I couldn't very well refuse."

"So, that's what kept you!"

She pulled his watch from its vest pocket nest, and pointed to it. "It's after five. You've been gone since 10 o'clock."

"I'm so sorry dear! I came back just as soon as I could. I didn't think you'd worry. I thought you'd know what was keeping me."

She smiled sardonically. "I wouldn't have guessed THAT."

He flushed again. "Dearest! Honey!" He tried to grasp her, but she avoided him, her countenance framed in disgust.

"I swear, dearest, that I had only one drink," he remonstrated. "That was three-quarters of an hour ago. That's why you can smell it so plainly."

She was torn by this scene. A half-hour ago she was afraid that she would never see him again, that he was dead, a victim of the traffic, or kidnapped, or—. And now here he was—.

"You didn't even call me."

Michael gulped. "I intended to, but—."

She shook her head.

"Never mind. Don't explain. Explanations won't compensate me for the worry that has racked me for the last two hours. Luckily I slept until then."

"You haven't had any lunch?"

He winced. "Dearest, please!"

He got down on his knees at her side and kissed her arm. "Please dear. I love you."

She let him kiss her.

"We're going out to dinner, and then we're going to a theater. After the show we'll go to one of the smart clubs and dance and have supper. And we won't be home until morNING!" He sang the last words in the familiar tune.

Another moment of silence, and then she asked: "What did you find out? What did the men have to say when they weren't begging you to have a drink?"

He hesitated. "Well, only one of them offered me any encouragement. The others seemed to think that there are already too many manufacturers in the field. This other man, though, said he believed he could handle a lot of stuff for me but that what he wanted was cheap stuff for export. Goods that could be sold in competition with British and German exports. And I don't know whether I want to do that sort of business."

"Then what are you going to do?"

For a moment he gazed out of the window. "I don't know... But let's don't worry about it, pet. Let's eat, drink—I mean dance and be merry."

Her blue-gray eyes looked deeply into his. Mrs. Shirleigh's remarks regarding Michael, repeated to her by Boasha, burned themselves into her memory. Was her husband a failure? A know-nothing? Her confidence in him was shaken.

from his Senatorial duties, Heflin usually can be found with the horses and hounds. He loves to attend one of the old fashioned fox hunts where the riders remain out in the country for two and three days.

"I get my greatest thrill of life," says Heflin, "from riding to the tune of hounds across broken country. That's the spice of life."

The Alabaman's secret weakness is a love for an old time Southern breakfast, and he'll really "walk a mile" to get one. It consists of bacon and eggs, buttered toast, turnip greens, hoeecake cornbread and buttermilk. Um, um, um.

For exercise, the Senator takes long walks. He has visited every nook and cranny of the capital on those strolls and is a much a city authority in Washington as the oldest inhabitant.

OWNS FAMOUS WAISTCOAT

No story of Heflin would be complete without some mention of his cream-colored waistcoat. It is the only double-breasted cream waistcoat in Congress and the only waistcoat of whatever color — so far as memory serves — that has ever been mentioned in the Congressional Record. And thirdly, it is the only waistcoat ever to arouse the envy of former Senator "Jim Ham" Lewis, of Illinois, the King of all the Senate's Beau Brummels.

But here is a bit of information about the Heflin waistcoat which never before has appeared in print. It is the reason why Heflin wears his unique vest. And here are "Tom's" own words:
